If you have a database background, this would be pretty obvious as to why you wouldn't be able to find products with multiple types based off how you are writing your scopes.

Database queries that are written from these scopes will multiply the rows to ensure that a product that has many types, will have a distinct row for each type. Your query when you combine both scopes is writing

where `types`.name = "Type1" AND `types`.name = "Type2"
